

File Handling in C

File handling allows a program to store data permanently in files and retrieve it later. The `fopen()` function is used to open a file, and `fclose()` is used to close it.

Functions like `fprintf()` and `fscanf()` are used to write to and read from files.

File handling is important for data storage, logging, configuration files, and record management in applications.