

Loop Control Statements in C

Loop control statements change the normal flow of loop execution. The break statement is used to exit a loop immediately when a condition is met.

The continue statement skips the current iteration and moves to the next iteration.

The goto statement transfers control to another part of the program using a label, but it is generally avoided because it can make the program difficult to understand.

These statements help in controlling loop behavior effectively.